Market Review

Asian credit markets had a mixed performance in November. The Investment Grade (IG) segment performed well, driven by duration-related gains. However, returns in the non-Investment Grade (non-IG) segment underperformed due to headwinds arising from widening credit spread action.

On a country level, in November, Sri Lanka emerged again as a strong performer delivering substantial positive returns as the country's debt restructuring efforts seemed to have made further progress. Taiwan and Malaysia also performed positively supported by favourable US treasury returns. On the flipside, Pakistan was the weakest performer, while India was dragged down by Adani's bribery allegation charges by the US SEC.

Sector wise, the Oil & Gas, Industrial and Diversified sectors all registered strong performance, supported by a combination of favourable US treasury returns and spread tightening actions. Conversely, the Real Estate sector underperformed the most, due to idiosyncratic events around Hong Kong credit. The Infrastructure and Utilities sectors also faced challenges, directly in reflection to the sell-off in bond prices within the Adani complex.

Investment Strategy

As we approach President-elect Donald Trump's inauguration, markets are seeking clarity on his administration's policies, particularly regarding tariffs, tax cuts, and fiscal strategies.

The specifics of proposed tariffs and tax cuts remain uncertain in terms of timing, scale, and implementation. However, the U.S. economy continues to exhibit resilience, with a resilient labour market and steady consumption supported by wage growth. This economic strength, coupled with potential inflationary pressures from tariffs and expansionary policies, may lead the Federal Reserve (Fed) to adopt a more gradual rate-cutting cycle than previously expected. In China, stabilisation efforts are ongoing, although their impact on growth appears modest. The property sector operates under a "put option" framework, with additional measures likely only if conditions deteriorate significantly.

As year-end approaches, market technicals are expected to quiet down, despite some new issuances. Looking ahead to 2025, the outlook for duration plays remains more uncertain compared to the clearer opportunities presented by credit spread and carry strategies.

In this environment, the portfolio strategy remains modestly underweight in duration, acknowledging the uncertainties in predicting rate movements. We maintain an overweight in the high-yield sector, driven by stable fundamentals, favourable technicals, and attractive carry potential. This segment continues to provide compelling income opportunities, supported by relatively low downgrade and default rates. Within the investment-grade segment, non-China investment-grade (IG) debt presents better relative value compared to China IG, reflecting more attractive risk-reward dynamics. Sectorally, we have modest overweight to Technology, Media, and Telecommunications, metals and mining, and consumer-related credits, leveraging their growth potential and structural resilience, while underweighting sovereigns and quasi-sovereigns, which are more vulnerable to rate volatility. Geographically, we are overweight Japan and Australia, where stable macroeconomic fundamentals and attractive yield spreads create appealing investment opportunities, aligning with our strategy to balance resilience with income generation.
